Research Interests

My research interests are in machine learning and algorithmic economics. I am especially interested in the interaction between people and AI. I have often studied this interaction in the context of prediction markets and other crowdsourcing systems. My passion is for AI that augments, rather than replaces, human abilities. A big fraction of my work has been theoretical, but I've begun incorporating more experiments into my research in order to better understand and model human behavior in technological systems. I occasionally speak about societal issues around AI, and lately I've been spending more time on fair and interpretable machine learning.
